IMMIGRANT ADJUSTMENT AND ETHNIC GROUPS

Published Material, 1920-1953.

The Canadian Citizenship Branch has assembled a bibliography of research material dealing with immigration, citizenship, ethnic groups, and the relations between ethnic groups in Canada. This publication, which contains titles of published material, is a companion to the one produced by the Branch in 1955, listing titles of unpublished theses. Supplementing both these works and bringing them up to date, the Branch also publishes Annual Bibliographies of research completed and in progress.

The bibliography is divided into sections, each one dealing with an ethnic group and arranged in alphabetical order by author. Wherever a brief abstract of the material was available, this has been included.

As the term "ethnic group" is interpreted differently by various academic disciplines, it is unlikely that its use in this bibliography as a means of classification will be acceptable to all students of ethnic groups. It is hoped, however, that its inadequacies will not seriously affect its usefulness.

Although every effort was made to produce as complete a bibliography as possible, it is not claimed to be exhaustive. A number of books and articles, judged to be more superficial than is desired by various students, were omitted when better titles were available. The editor would appreciate, however, having any important omissions brought to his attention.

A great deal of the material assembled in this bibliography was obtained from the Canadian Historical Review. Much was also provided by members of universities, libraries, and other interested individuals. The cooperation of the staffs of the Public Archives of Canada and the National Library of Canada has been very helpful. We wish to thank all those who collaborated in this work by providing information. It is our hope that the bibliography will be useful to all those who have an interest in research dealing with Canadian immigration, citizenship and ethnic groups.

"Witch-fear Among the Aivilik Eskimos."

American Journal of Psychiatry, Vol. 110, no. 3,
September 1953, pp. 194-199.

The Aiviliks live along Roes Welcome, north of Hudson Bay. Are largely engaged in hunting and trapping. Belief in magic has given way to a belief in witchcraft as a means to explain why certain kinds of events occur. Evidence suggests that witch-fear is associated with insecurity --- it became prominent around 1930 when Aivilik survival was imperiled by T.B. and hunger. It is seen to be related to the crises resulting from increasing contacts with whites, i.e., it is associated with acculturation.

Sickness and death, particularly, are attributed to witchcraft. Three cases of catatonic schizophrenia are discussed as evidence. Relation of cultural beliefs to mental maladjustment discussed.
